

New Industrial & Commercial Condos in Calgary's Northeast Offer Premium Commercial Space in Great Neighborhood

Calgary, July 16, 2012 – In Calgary's burgeoning Northeast neighborhood, on a high-visibility site fronting McKnight Boulevard and Metis Trail, the new NorthWing Business Park is set to be one of two industrial strata projects in the city to offer spaces of 10,000 to 40,000 sq ft.

"There is nothing like it currently existing in the city," says Michael Massing, Senior Associate of Industrial Sales and Leasing for Colliers International in Calgary. "There are very few of these larger, industrial condos. It's a new concept in Calgary and it's in high demand. Many entrepreneurs and business owners want to own their real estate and create equity at a comparable cost to leasing."

NorthWing offers these larger units, but smaller bays as well, all set on 7.41 acres – zoned and ready to go. Across the development, sizes range from 2,200 to 82,000 square feet, these warehouse spaces offer small businesses a chance to build equity and assets while growing their business. "We're meeting a need in the market," says Michael Hungerford, of Hungerford Properties, the Vancouver-based developers behind the project. "With low interest rates and a limited supply of quality industrial product, this makes owning very appealing for Calgary's small business owners."

Developed by Hungerford Properties, The NorthWing Business Park is part of the up and coming Northeast neighborhood. Next to the key transportation routes of Metis Trail and McKnight Blvd with close access to Deerfoot Trail, the development offers convenient access to Calgary's International Airport and is next door to the McKnight LRT station. The closing of Barlow Trail will reroute airport traffic to Metis Trail which is conveniently on the doorstep of NorthWing's location.

NorthWing is also part of an emerging neighbourhood where large players such as Walmart, Shaw and Bell are located as well as the Calgary Police headquarters. Business owners at NorthWing will benefit from the efficiency, time and fuel consumption savings that comes from being located on a major traffic route as well as from major expansion efforts currently underway at the Calgary airport.

"There are seriously limited options for owning commercial warehouse space in Calgary," says Hungerford. "This provides another legitimate option for growing businesses on a major transportation route," says Hungerford. "Smaller bay units have sold well in Calgary over last few years and there's continued demand for high quality industrial and commercial condos of that size. But the highest demand is for ownership of large, 10,000 square foot warehouse units. Those are hard to find and that's what we are offering."

NorthWing is also the most versatile and unique commercial park in the region, able to accommodate every user from large-scale tenants requiring ample loading area with dock loading, to small and medium businesses.

“One of the benefits of this property is that we have a wide range of uses that are allowed under the current zoning, above and beyond the typical industrial zoning,” says Massing. “The zoning can accommodate everything from warehousing and distribution, manufacturing, building materials and parts suppliers, laboratories and contractor shops, but also more commercial uses such as athletic and recreational facilities, among other things.”

NorthWing buildings are Class A commercial space built with structural steel framing, insulated concrete walls, high-efficiency glass, sprinklers throughout, optimum natural light and LEED-grade T5 lighting. “The planning of the two new buildings is intended to provide a very high level flexibility for each individual tenant,” says Rick Lewis, partner with Gibbs Gage Architects. “There is mezzanine potential for each bay that creates a unique 2-storey appearance not typical in this context. And there’s a very high quality building envelope and a high level of durability both inside and out.”

Thoughtfully designed for function and flexibility, the units offer oversized doors, generous loading areas and ample parking, allowing owners to combine multiple units and construct mezzanines.
